Need For Speed Carbon V1.4.0 -19 Trainers

Category:Need for SpeedGoogle has started to roll out Android 5.1.1 (Lollipop) to Motorola's Moto X family. The update includes a handful of new features and fixes: To get the update, you must manually flash a new factory image. In order to do this, you need to be rooted. Google's instructions aren't entirely clear on how to manually update the phone. To learn how, read this step-by-step process. The Moto X itself is the first device to receive Android 5.1.1; it has been enabled for all variants of the device that have a compatible network provider in the US. Other devices that have a compatible network provider outside of the US will have it enabled soon, Google said. The update does include code that will start to remove the custom ROM that Moto developed in order to enable 3G, which is a crucial part of its custom UI. We won't have a look at the custom ROM in action until after the update, but as we mentioned previously, Motorola has been working to merge its custom UI with AOSP. The update supports up to 1GB of RAM. Motorola says that all devices that have a 1GB RAM and a 2GB RAM will be able to update to Android 5.1.1, but they must be on Verizon's network in the US. The update is available now as an over-the-air update. [tube maxvideo:5642280] Check out the press release below. Motorola Inc. today announced that Android 5.1.1 Lollipop for the Moto X and Moto G on Verizon Wireless and GSM networks is available for download to Moto X and Moto G devices, including those shipped in the US.
